Chromogranin A is a highly sensitive and specific marker for neuroendocrine cells. The aim of this study was to evaluate chromogranin A immunoreactivity in pancreatic adenocarcinoma. Pancreatic adenocarcinoma samples were stained with chromogranin A, epithelial membrane antigen, and glucose transporter-1 monoclonal antibodies. Chromogranin A immunoreactivity was evaluated by means of a semiquantitative scoring method. Survival was studied on the basis of the average chromogranin A immunostaining score. Tumor samples from 17 patients with pancreatic adenocarcinoma were available for immunohistochemical and immunocytochemical study. Chromogranin A was immunoreactive in 62.3% of the adenocarcinomas. There was no significant difference in survival between patients with and without chromogranin A-immunoreactive tumors. Epithelial membrane antigen and glucose transporter-1 immunostaining was weak and unspecific and did not correlate with chromogranin A immunoreactivity. We found no significant correlation between the presence of chromogranin A-immunoreactive tumors and survival in patients with pancreatic adenocarcinoma.
